POLICIES AND PROCEDURES WITH RESPECT TO THE HEALTH INFORMATION PROTECTION ACT

Introduction

Every individual, family or couple receiving services from a Registered Chiropractor at (name of clinic) should be aware of the collection, use, storage and disclosure of their personal health information obtained during the course of receiving chiropractic services.

What is The Health Information Protection Act?

The Health Information Protection Act (HIPA) legislates the rights of individuals with respect to the privacy of their personal health information. This Act also legislates the obligations of trustees with respect to the collection, use, retention, correction, access, storage and disclosure of an individual's personal health information records.

What is meant by "Personal Health Information"?

Personal health information means any physical or mental health record about the individual that is collected during the course of providing services. A "record" means any health information about the individual that is collected and retained in any manner, including, but not limited to hand-written notes, formal reports, or information stored on a computer. Refer to HIPA, section 2.M.

Policies and Procedures

Note: In the policies and procedures below, "individual" refers to a particular person, who receives chiropractic services from (name of clinic).

1. Collection, Use and Disclosure of Personal Health Information

Only personal health information that is necessary for the effective and required treatment, assessment or care of an individual will be collected by (name of clinic). At times, information is collected from other sources (ie. physicians, other health care practitioners, insurance companies) for the purpose of providing appropriate chiropractic services. This information is collected only if the individual has consented to the collection of this material or if the material is deemed essential in providing the necessary chiropractic service to the individual.

All personal health information collected on an individual by (name of clinic) will be held in secure custody and used only to assist the individual to whom it directly relates. Information will only be shared on a need-to-know basis.

2. Protection of Personal Health Information

In order to maintain the integrity and confidentiality of the individual, all personal health information that is under the custody and care of (name of clinic) is held in a secure room designated for the retention of such material. All personal health information held in the computer system has adequate safeguards to protect unauthorized access to the information (for example: security access/pass codes).

3. Retention and Destruction of Personal Health Information

All personal health information collected on an individual will be retained for a period of fifteen (15) years. Personal health information collected for its original purpose will be retrievable and useable for the full retention period. Information stored on the hard drive of a computer will be transferred to the hard drive of a new computer when technological changes are required. Old hard drives and other electronic equipment are to be cleared of personal health information before destruction.

In order to protect the confidentiality of individuals who have received services at (name of clinic), all personal health information records will be destroyed at the end of the retention period by contracting the services of a reputable company specific for this purpose.

When (name of clinic) ceases as a business to provide chiropractic services to the public, all personal health information records will continue to remain in the custody of the trustee (chiropractor) or designated trustee, for the retention period. The information will then be disposed of in the manner described.

4. Disclosure of Personal Health Information

There are different consents for different situations regarding disclosure of personal health information.

All individuals providing written consent to disclose their personal health information will be provided with information as to the intended use of the disclosed information. Information disclosed to other persons, agencies or trustees will be on a need-to-know basis. That is, only information deemed necessary for an understanding or treatment progress of the individual, or the continued treatment of the individual will be disclosed. Any consent signed by an individual will be valid for a period of ninety (90) days; at which time a second consent will be required to further disclose personal health information.

Any individual receiving chiropractic services has the right to revoke their consent to disclose personal health information to others. Consent can be revoked at any time with written or verbal notice to (name of clinic), but revocation only becomes effective from the date of the signed revocation. Verbal notice must be documented.

There are times that personal health information can be shared without the individual's signed permission. For instance, personal health information will be released without an individual's permission if the chiropractor believes that disclosing the information will avoid or minimize a danger to the health or safety of the individual or other persons. Information may also be disclosed without an individual's consent when a court order or subpoena is issued requesting the information.

Additional examples include disclosure of personal health information for the purposes of obtaining payment for the provision of services, or when disclosure is in accordance with the ethical practices of The Chiropractic Act, 1994 and HIPA. Prior to the commencement of any chiropractic service, all individuals will be informed about any disclosures of personal health information that may be made without that individual's consent.

5. Access to Personal Health Information

All individuals who have received, or are currently receiving chiropractic services from a registered chiropractor at (name of clinic), have the right to request access to their personal health information. Requests for access to personal health information must be received in writing, and the information requested must only concern the recipient of the services. Individuals may also designate, in writing, another person who shall have the right to access their personal health information. All requests will be responded to within thirty (30) days from the date of the written request.

There are circumstances when the right to access an individual's personal health information may be denied. For example, access could be denied if:

- Knowledge of the information could reasonably be expected to endanger the physical or mental health or safety of the individual or other persons;
- Disclosure of the information would reveal the personal health information of another person who has not consented to the disclosure;
- Disclosure of the information could identify a third party who supplied information in confidence;
- The information was collected principally in anticipation of, or for use in, a civil or criminal proceeding;
- Disclosure of the information could interfere with a lawful investigation.

In some cases, when access to personal health information is denied, individuals may still be able to have access to part of their record, as long as this can reasonably be accomplished without disclosing the information to which the applicant is denied.

6. Amend Personal Health Information

Individuals may also request an amendment be made to their personal health information if the individual believes that there are errors or omissions in the record. Amendments are not guaranteed, but a notation will be placed in the individual's record with respect to the requested amendment. Amendments must be forwarded to the appropriate trustee who needs to know the amended information.

7. Referral to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner of Saskatchewan

If the patient is not satisfied with the handling of their personal health information and our clinic cannot resolve the matter, the patient can request, in writing, a review by the Chiropractors' Association of Saskatchewan, or the patient may take the matter directly to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Saskatchewan.

ACCESS TO PERSONAL HEALTH INFORMATION

Upon request, we will give a patient (or the patient's legally authorized representative) access to his or her personal information from the records we have in our custody. Our privacy officer will also explain how we collect and use personal information, and to whom it has been disclosed.

Within 30 business days of receiving your completed "Request for Access to Personal Information" form, we will provide you with a copy of the information, let you review the original records if we cannot reasonably provide copies to you, or give reasons for not providing access. We may extend the time for responding to your request in certain circumstances. There are a few circumstances where we are permitted or required by law to refuse to give you access to some information in your records.

If we refuse access, our privacy officer will explain the reasons for this. If you disagree with our refusal, we will try to resolve the matter with you. If we cannot resolve the matter to your satisfaction, you may ask, in writing, that the Chiropractors' Association of Saskatchewan to try to resolve it. If you are still not satisfied, you may refer the matter in writing to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Saskatchewan.

AMENDING PERSONAL HEALTH INFORMATION

If a patient believes that information in their file is inaccurate or incomplete, the patient or legal representative may ask the chiropractor to correct the error or omission. The privacy officer will explain the process.

Process:

We will not amend patient records to change our diagnosis or opinion, unless we are convinced that our diagnosis or opinion was mistaken.

Within 30 days of receiving the request, we will correct any information in the patient file that we have verified to be inaccurate or incomplete, then send a copy of the corrected record to each organization to which the inaccurate or incomplete information was disclosed within the past year.

If we decide that no correction is necessary, our privacy officer will explain the reasons for this. We will note the requested correction and reasons for not making any correction and include it in the records, to indicate a correction was requested but not made.

If the patient disagrees and believes that a change should have been made, we will attempt to resolve the matter. If we cannot resolve the matter, then the patient can request a review by the Chiropractors' Association of Saskatchewan. If the patient is not satisfied after the review, the patient may take the matter to the Office of the Information and Privacy Commissioner for Saskatchewan.

ACCURACY OF PATIENT RECORDS

Patient records should:

- Be written as soon as possible after an event has occurred, providing current information on the care and condition of the patient.
- Be written clearly, legibly and in such a manner that they cannot be erased.
- Be written in such a manner that any alterations or additions are dated, timed, and signed in such a way that the original entry can still be read clearly.
- Be accurately dated, timed and signed, with the name of the author being printed alongside the first entry.
- Be readable on any photocopies.
- Be written, wherever possible, with the involvement of the patient.
- Be clear, unambiguous, and written in terms that the patient can understand. Abbreviations, if used, should follow common conventions.
- Be consecutive.
- Include medical observations, examinations, tests, diagnoses, prognoses, and other treatments.

SECURITY OF PATIENT RECORDS

For all types of records, staff working in chiropractic offices where patient records are kept should:

- Shut and lock doors and cabinets as required.
- Wear building passes/ID if issued.
- Control access to fax machines and do not leave records unattended there.
- Ensure fax numbers are correct before sending. Stay at the fax machine until the transmission is complete.
- Query the status of strangers.
- Know whom to tell if anything suspicious or worrying is noted.
- Not tell unauthorized personnel how security systems operate.
- Not breach security themselves.
- Maintain sign-in sheets for individuals who have access to secure areas.
- Sign confidentiality agreements that outline penalties for inappropriately collecting, using, or disclosing personal information
- Keep health records on-site wherever possible. When records must be taken off-site, they should be kept secure at all times. Laptop and handheld computers should be password protected. Data should be encrypted wherever possible.
- Immediately report any security breach or loss to the Privacy Officer.

Paper records should be:

- Formally booked out from the normal filing system. This should include date booked out, date returned, name of file, name of personnel removing/returning file, signature, and the location to which the file is being transported.
- Tracked if transferred, with a note made or sent to the filing location of the transfer.
- Returned to the filing location as soon as possible after completion of treatment.
- Stored securely within the clinic or office, arranged so that the record can be found easily if needed urgently.
- Stored closed when not in use so that contents are not seen accidentally where they might be looked at by unauthorized persons.
- Held in secure storage with clear labelling.

With electronic records, staff should:

- Log-out of computer systems or applications when not in use (whether leaving for the day or a few minutes).
- Not leave a terminal unattended when logged-in.
- Keep computers away from public view and access (for example, away from waiting rooms, ground floor windows or busy passageways).
- Ensure laptops and computers are kept in a locked office when away for extended periods (for example, overnight or vacation).
- Not share user IDs or passwords with other people. If other staff members have a need to access records, appropriate access should be organized for them – this must not be by using other users' IDs or passwords.
- Change passwords at regular intervals to prevent anyone else using them.
- Not use short passwords, or use names or words that are known to be associated with them (e.g., children's or pet names or birthdays). Strong passwords contain a variety of letters, numbers and symbols. Passwords should never be written down.
- Revoke user IDs and passwords as soon as authorized users resign or are dismissed.
- Always clear the screen of a previous patient's information before seeing another patient.
- Use an automatic password-protected and time-out activated screensaver to prevent casual viewing of patient information by others.
- Install firewall software where Internet access to computer systems exists.
- Install anti-virus and anti-spyware software on all computers.
- Use audit trails to track when a record is accessed, by whom, and whether the accessing individual has the necessary authorization.
- Ensure data backup intervals and methods, and disaster recovery plans are in place and periodically reviewed.
- For large computer systems, develop and implement rules on access levels for different users for different purposes.
- Ensure computers are encrypted.
- Keep portable equipment secure (for example, do not leave laptops unattended in a vehicle).

- Store USB memory devices, CDs and other media in a secure place (i.e., locked drawer).
- Develop a process to destroy or remove personal health information when changing electronic equipment.

POLICY ON RETENTION OF PATIENT FILES

The Board adopts the following policy:

All practicing members must retain patient files for a minimum of ten (10) years from the last date of treatment for adult patients and, for minor patients, a minimum of ten (10) years from the date that the age of majority of that patient is reached.

August 22, 2017

LEAVING A CHIROPRACTIC PRACTICE

When a chiropractic practice is closed, chiropractors have a professional and legal duty to:

- protect personal health information until it is destroyed, archived or transferred to another trustee,
- arrange the secure transfer of patient records to another trustee that agrees to accept the responsibility,
- arrange the secure storage and retrieval of patient records for the remaining retention periods, or,
- securely dispose of records where the retention period no longer applies.

In addition, chiropractors must also ensure continuity of care (Appendix IV, Part I, Section 6) for those patients who require it.

Specific considerations for protecting personal health information when leaving a practice:

- Notify your patients that you are leaving. Ensure that the patient notification includes information on your departure date, the process for how they can obtain a copy of their records or request transfer of a copy of their records to a new chiropractor, and how they may access any records stored by a service provider. Advise them that a reasonable fee may be charged for providing this service.
- With patient authorization (either written, or verbal and documented), transfer a copy of the patient record to the new chiropractor.
- Ensure that the original record is retained according to CAS retention policy for the purposes of future complaints or legal action.
- For accuracy and completeness, make sure that all patient record documentation is completed before records are archived.
- Ensure there is a process in place to support any outstanding patient work that may be in progress (for example, pending tests that may require follow-up).
- If the records have reached their retention limit and are no longer required, follow secure records disposition procedures.

Specific considerations for secure storage and retrieval services through a service provider:

If your files are no longer needed, but have not reached their required retention limit, you may wish to use a service provider to store the files until such time as they can be destroyed. Ensure the service provider allows for file retrieval in the event you need the file for an unforeseen complaint or legal action. Ensure you have a legal agreement in place that the service provider will:

- Maintain the confidentiality of all patient information stored, providing access to information only to individuals authorized by you the trustee, or those with written authorization from a patient or legal representative.
- Upon your request, promptly return all confidential patient information without retaining copies.
- Not use the patient information for any purpose other than what was mutually agreed upon. This includes selling, sharing, discussing or transferring any patient information to unauthorized business entities, organizations, or individuals.
- Provide a secure storage facility that protects against theft, loss, damage and unauthorized access
- Securely destroy patient information at the end of the retention period, as specified by you, the trustee.
